Our Canvas History

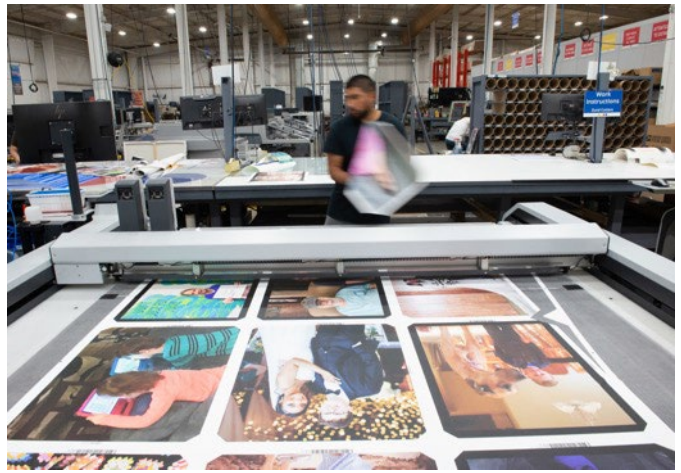

Sensaria offers a standardized traditional stretched canvas product that has its roots in fine art and was created for artists.

- We utilize world-renowned Fredrix canvas, which started in the late 1800s. Fredrix canvas has been used by artists such as Andy Warhol and Norman Rockwell. In the mid 1990s, this canvas was adapted into a formula for digital canvas reproductions of artist artworks that we coined as “Giclées”. Our proprietary formula has been optimized over decades into its modern version for the needs of professionals, prosumers, and consumers everywhere.
- Today, our high-quality canvas prints are made following a standardized, lean manufacturing process at 3 U.S. facilities and 5 global facilities. Our extensive footprint around our leading core product is built to scale for customers, and we produce millions of canvas prints annually.
- What began as an exclusive product designed to the meet the needs of artists is now a product offering of the same high quality but available to customers of all sizes from everyday moms and dads to the same working creative professionals we began with to global brands and retailers.
